

THE GREAT BITCOIN BONANZA

In 2009, a mysterious figure named Satoshi Nakamoto introduced the world's first cryptocurrency: Bitcoin. Ever since, the real identity of Mr. Nakamoto has remained a mystery. Some think "Satoshi Nakamoto" is a pseudonym for a single individual who is now quietly enjoying the life of a multibillionaire. Others think that "Satoshi Nakamoto" is actually a team of programmers and cryptography experts who collaborated to invent Bitcoin in secret. Some have even speculated that Mr. Nakamoto is actually eccentric businessperson Elon Musk. But you have recently discovered the truth:

Satoshi Nakamoto was once a real person who is now deceased. As a true lover of cryptographic puzzles, he has left the world a series of clues in plain sight for anyone clever enough to see them. Successfully follow the clues, and you can claim his fortune of one million bitcoins. Or, if Mr. Nakamoto sold his bitcoins before his untimely demise, you may instead claim the items he bought with his valuable asset.

Here is a picture of the first clue that you and your team have located:
